derful college, with a faculty dedicated to educating their students, and a student body motivated to learn. She has found her colleagues, and Concordia in general, to be warm and welcoming. Dr. Mark Schuler, one of the two newest members to join the growing CSP Religion faculty, has filled a vacant position that had been open for two years. Schuler will be teaching Religion, related languages such as Greek and Latin, and New Testament.

Schuler attended Concordia Senior College formally in Fort Wayne, Indiana, and then went on to receive his doctorate at Concordia Seminary in St. Louis, Missouri. After receiving his Th.D., Schuler had a desire to teach. He comes to CSP with a background in Parish Ministry from a St. Louis, Missouri urban community and a rural community in Iowa. His past experience in an urban community influenced him to be a candidate to fill CSP's open position.

Schuler would like CSP to know that he is concerned about the urban community and the failure of the Church to reach out to the various cultures. He sees the urban community in St. Paul reaching out and believes he, as well as the college, needs to serve the urban area. He finds that teaching in an urban area is both challenging and enjoyable, and that Concordia offers a unique place for the Church and the urban community to come together.

Campus Minister in Limbo

by Amy MacFee

Curtis Deterding has joined Concordia this fall as the Interim Campus Minister. Although Deterding's face is new in chapel leadership, he is not new to the campus. He previously acted as the coordinator of Project Samuel, traveling throughout the nation, recruiting students interested in pursuing careers within the church, and promoting the various church-related programs here at Concordia. He was also involved in athletics as the assistant soccer coach.

Deterding is serving as campus minister temporarily while the process of calling a permanent Chaplain is completed. He is expected to be a part of this body through December. However, the complex hiring process has proven to be extremely slow. Therefore, if no one is hired by the end of December, his stay could be extended. When asked how he felt about the uncertainty of the length of time he will spend here, he replied that it, "puts his job in limbo."

The search for a new campus minister is well on its way. The college has completed state-required background checks and has narrowed down the list of candidates to only a few names. The process of interviewing should begin in the near future.

Deterding eagerly attacks his responsibilities and appreciates the time he can spend here, although it is limited. He is excited about the unusually high chapel attendance and notes that services have been filled to capacity lately. He will be focusing his energies on the Spiritual Life Committee, encouraging spiritual growth and support on campus. His main goal is to assist in creating a loving Christian environment where each student can have his or her spiritual needs met and can grow on an individual level. †

Opening lines. The first electric can opener was introduced in 1931. Although the can was developed in 1810, it wasn't until the American Civil War that the first patented manual can opener became popular. Before that, people improvised, using knives, bayonets or a chisel and hammer.

make it to the dining room. This meal will include a deli sandwich (which can be made to your specifications with enough notice), a drink, chips, dessert, and fruit or vegetable. These meals will be available with at least a week's notification to DuWayne. Shorter notice meals can be provided but not on all occasions.

Some of the most important little details about our new service include the following: cards for meals are non-transferable. If you are not eating on a given day, you cannot give your card to somebody else to use. This rule is most often misunderstood because a customer will say that they paid for the meal. While this is somewhat true, a missed-meal factor has already been figured in, so the cost that you paid is actually lower than the cost of the meals. Also, DuWayne wants to hear how things are going. He will be providing a comment board in the dining hall for anyone who wants to say something or ask a question. Your comments and DuWayne's expedient responses will be posted for all to see. Because DuWayne believes that communication and service are vital to his business here, he will go out of his way to serve you (and if, perhaps, you want to know the derivative of x or the migratory patterns of the bald eagle, DuWayne plans on researching the answers if they are on the comment board).

DuWayne Hegel and Marriott Dining Services have excellent services to offer Concordia. He is willing to try any reasonable suggestions and enjoys speaking with students. To serve our campus better, DuWayne is looking to hire additional student workers, especially for a lunch 10:30a.m.-1:30p.m. shift. If you need a job or you'd just like to see the man behind our new dining experience, call DuWayne or stop by his office located in the kitchen of the dining services building. †
